Watch the video twice. Write your internal thoughts (internal monologue) as if you are watching the giraffe through a missing tile in the wall.

Things to think about:

Sounds:

Play the video through with your eyes closed, just listening.

What can you hear? How do the sounds make you feel? Does it sound like anything else that you know of? How do the sounds move around the building? Are they quiet sounds or louder sounds?

Here is a great chance to use onomatopoeia (clip,clop/ splash, crash etc.)

Smells:

Think about everything in the video that could have a smell associated with it (giraffes, swimming pool, building etc.)

How do the smells make you feel? Do they remind you of anything? How do they feel as you breathe them in, is it a nice smell?

Colours:

What colours can you see in this video? How do they make you feel? What colours do you notice the most? What do you notice about how the colours look against each other?

I have had a go at writing this, please read through this and magpie different ideas if you are struggling.

Undisturbed, the silent, white, clinical building was peaceful. I had removed the wobbly tile that was waiting to be taken, creating a tiny, squared peep hole. Fluttering eyelashes made it hard to clearly make out what was around. Wait. What was that noise? It was an unmistakable noise that triggered memories of, what I thought could only be, a zoo. The small, boyish grunt and the noise of echoing clip clops. What could it be? Continuing in a steady rhythm, my senses were interrupted by a flash of vibrant orange. I strained to look further through the only viewing platform that I had. I was sure my eyes and ears were playing unforgiving tricks on me. It couldn't be. Could it?

The towering, unthreatening body of orange and brown was definite. It was a giraffe. Not one, many. I tried to count them as they passed by, but my excitement made it difficult to focus closely. What could they possibly be doing here in a mundane, dull leisure centre?

Now it is your turn to have a go! Enjoy guys, I love this video!
